Future Opportunities & Challenges for Evaluation in the UN

1 April 2015

Dr. Indran Naidoo is the Director of the Independent Evaluation Office at UNDP. For more than 20 years Indran has headed several independent evaluation units. Prior to joining UNDP in 2012 he held oversight positions in evaluation in South Africa. He joined the national civil service in 1995, when the country's political transition took place, and set up the first monitoring and evaluation Directorate in a government department. Throughout his career he advanced thinking in the areas of development, education, evaluation, and governance and has actively supported the development of the discipline of evaluation at the country and international level. Indran was a founding member, and held elected positions, at the South African Monitoring and Evaluation Association (SAMEA). He was an elected Board member of the International Development Evaluation Association (IDEAS) and has, since 2008, served as visiting faculty at the International Programme for Development Evaluation (IPDET). Dr. Naidoo received his PhD in Evaluation from the University of Witwatersrand and his M.A. in Geography from West Virginia University, USA.
